If excessive worry and anxiety are overwhelming your life, consider participating in this clinical research study evaluating an investigational medication for Generalized Anxiety Disorder (GAD).

If you are one of the millions of people struggling with GAD, you know how this condition can put a significant strain on your daily life. Unfortunately, current GAD treatments can often cause undesirable side effects and may take several weeks to reduce anxiety.

To pre-qualify for this research study, you must:

- Be 18-65 years of age,
- Be exhibiting symptoms of Generalized Anxiety Disorder (GAD), such as chronic anxiety and excessive worry,
- Not have a history of schizophrenia, bipolar disorder, or eating disorders, AND
- Not have a history of substance abuse.

Qualified participants will receive research study medication and research study-related medical evaluations at no cost. Reimbursement for time and travel may also be provided.
